Hands and hearts at the ready, over a hundred employees from Anchorage’s business community will spread out across the city to help local non-profits complete critical projects as part of United Way’s 28th annual Day of Caring on Tuesday, September 14, 2021.

Day of Caring, part of United Way’s UNITE TO THRIVE WEEK, is a rolling event this year with additional projects taking place through the month. Volunteers will spend their time on everything from cutting brush, removing decking, and prepping garden beds for winter to packing food boxes for seniors.

Day of Caring is a win all around. For non-profits, it’s an opportunity to complete a project that may not have otherwise gotten done, leaving more time to focus on their services. For volunteers, it’s an opportunity to strengthen ties among co-workers while gaining a deeper understanding of local needs.

All projects have COVID protocols in place including social distancing and mask requirements.

Here are several locations where volunteers will be at work Tuesday and Thursday:
